Helping to save over £4 million in energy bills so far....

Utility Aid helps charities manage their risk to rising energy costs by providing services that reduce their energy costs and help them become more energy efficient. On top of that, we create employment for people with disabilities as energy efficiency managers.

So far Utility Aid has helped its charity clients save over £4 million on their energy bills, installed over 700 smart meters to monitor energy usage and helped charities reduce their carbon footprint and become more energy efficient. Utility Aid provides three services to help charities address these issues.

Wholesale energy purchasing

Wholesale energy purchasing is where companies buy energy from the wholesale energy market where it is traded as a commodity. By combining the energy consumption of a number of businesses in a portfolio arrangement Inenco, the UK's largest energy consultancy, will trade the portfolio as a notional company and thereby bring the advantages of the wholesale market to small to medium enterprises. Inenco now has £1 billion of energy under management for a number of 'blue chip' companies and some major charities.

Inenco and Utility Aid have now formed a partnership which will allow any charity into the scheme, irrespective of their energy spend.

Energy efficiency management

Utility Aid offers an energy efficiency service to charities to help charities reduce their energy dependency.

Free energy audit

We will undertake a full audit of your current energy supply agreements. This will help you understand the implications of your current energy purchasing and usage policy and how the introduction of energy efficiency measures could help to reduce your energy costs.
